An Amendment.

We don't propose, in the present instance, to dispute the correctness of our cotemporary's rather loose way of putting Gen. CLAY's short comings, and the Administration's lack of regard for the decencies and proprieties of the Public Service. Nor will we oppose the recommendation of our contemporary in the in any sense, with the Commercial that we are rather delighted-than otherwise-to concur with it. Never was a more flagrant misuse made of an army, than that by the Republicans when they called upon the officers in command, selected by themselves, and holding their potion President, to make pollitics for them. This attempt to convert the army into an electioneering machine, through the officers, has waked up the privates, who are telling quite another story. Those who went into the ranks as Republicans have turned Democrats, and the country papers are filled with letters from "the hore the prevention and steeling term." from "the boys," both sorrowful and startling.

They tell the story "from the ranks," and it should make the Republicans quake.
